DEATH TOLL RISES
AFTER MIGRANT BOAT
CAPSIZES OFF EGYPT

Nine more bodies have been recovered from the Mediterranean a day after a boat carrying hundreds of migrants capsized off the coast of Egypt, officials said on Thursday, bringing the death toll to 52. Police arrested four members of the boat's crew. Security sources said it had been loaded with almost 600 migrants. The boat sank early on Wednesday off Burg Rashed, a village in Egypt's northern Beheira province where the Nile meets the Mediterranean. Rescue workers and fishermen have rescued 169 people, suggesting hundreds might have perished at sea. A survivor whose comments appeared in a video posted online said the migrants had been told that about 200 people would be on board but the smugglers had added another 50, causing the boat to founder. REUTERS

TOP US GENERAL: UNWISE TO SHARE INTELLIGENCE
WITH RUSSIA ON SYRIA

The top U.S. general told Congress it would be unwise to share intelligence with Russia and stressed that would not be one of the military's missions if Washington and Moscow were to ever work together against Islamist militants in Syria. The United States and Russia clinched a ceasefire deal earlier this month that held out the possibility of joint targeting of Islamic State and other militants after a cessation of hostilities and delivery of humanitarian aid. But neither the U.S. nor Russian governments disclosed details about how precisely any possible future military coordination would work between the former Cold War foes. And the ceasefire quickly collapsed, making the possibility of future U.S.-Russia cooperation look remote. Marine General Joseph Dunford, the chairman of the U.S. military's Joint Chiefs of Staff, suggested any such coordination at a so-called "joint integration cell" would be extremely limited. The military, he said, had no intention of forging an intelligence sharing arrangement with Russia. REUTERS

SENATORS SEEK LABOR
DEPARTMENT PROBE
OF WELLS FARGO

Eight U.S. senators asked the Labor Department on Thursday to launch a probe into whether Wells Fargo may have violated wage and hour laws by failing to pay overtime to tellers and sales representatives who worked late to meet sales quotas. The request comes after Wells Fargo earlier this month was ordered to pay $190 million to settle civil charges alleging its employees had set up 2 million fake accounts in customers' names without their knowledge or consent. REUTERS

The Reason Foundation released its annual highway report Thursday and the Bay State didn't fare so well.

Thursday and it revealed what Bay State drivers already probably know.

Massachusetts landed in the bottom of the rankings—along with Alaska, New Jersey, Hawaii and Rhode Island—in the report tracks the performance of all 50-owned state highway systems.

The Reason Foundation collects data that state highway agencies provide to the federal government on their spending and performance and this edition is based on 2013, the last year with complete data, the foundation said.

Although Massachusetts exhibited higher spending than most states, it ranked 46th in overall performance.

CONGESTION

Massachusetts spent the third-highest amount on total disbursements per state-controlled mile at $675,939, according to the report, topped only by Florida and New Jersey. South Carolina had the lowest total disbursements with $35,286 and also earned the top ranking of the overall report.

The Bay State earned low marks for its congestion, which leads to those over 50 hours in delays per auto commuter annually. Massachusetts was one of eight states to reach that (unfortunate) milestone.

Though our state has seen improvements in its bridges, the state still reported that more than a third of its bridges are deficient.

Massachusetts did earn a positive ranking in one area: For 2013, the Bay State had the lowest fatality rate in the nation. The state had a fatality rate of 0.58 per 100 million vehicle miles, which is lower than the national average of 1.10.

Live graffiti gallery comes to South End Open Market

See internationally renowned graffiti artists do their magic in real time.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
letters@metro.us

The South End Open Market has been supporting local artists and vendors since it started 13 years ago, but this week it's branching out to highlight a different medium: graffiti.

On Sunday, the market (located at Ink Block) is hosting #OFFTHEWALL, a live graffiti art gallery and block party that the market says is the first of its kind in Boston.

"When we first launched our markets 13 years ago, we were the only group dedicated to supporting the livelihood of independent artists," said Chris Masci, CEO and founder of New England Open Markets, in a news release. "Today, we see art and farmers markets popping up on every other block. In order for artists to thrive in today's world, we must constantly reinvent ourselves, but more importantly serve as champions for local talent."

Masci added that the #OFFTHEWALL artists are "globally sought after" for public art installations

and yet, he said, Boston is unaware of that kind of creativity right in its own backyard.

The #OFFTHEWALL event includes such artists as Brand Rockwell, Probak, Geo "BOWZ," BrianLife and Imagine.

"Boston is quickly emerging in the international graffiti scene as a city home to some of the world's most talented graffiti artists, yet we have not established that reputation locally," said Brand Rockwell, co-founder of #OFFTHEWALL.

The "live" part of the graffiti gallery means artists will be creating murals on site, and the completed graffiti murals will remain on display in the South End's New York Streets neighborhood after the event.

In addition to the live gallery, #OFFTHEWALL is an all-day block party featuring mimosas, craft beers and a Motown-beats soundtrack provided by Saucy Lady Music, a Boston-based singer and DJ originally from Japan.

South End Open Market opens at 10 a.m. on Sunday at Ink Block, located at 375 Harrison Avenue. The graffiti gallery will be live from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Tzarnaev prosecutor named top assistant to Massachusetts US attorney

Massachusetts U.S. Attorney Carmen Ortiz announced that William Weinreb, lead prosecutor in the Boston Marathon bomber case, has been appointed as her first assistant U.S. attorney.

Weinreb led a team of prosecutors and investigators in achieving the conviction of Boston Marathon bomber Dzhokhar Tsarnaev last year. The jury subsequently recommended that Tsarnaev be sentenced to death by lethal injection.

Weinreb previously served as counsel to the U.S. Attorney for two years and was deputy chief of the National Security Unit as well as coordinator of the Anti-Terrorism Advisory Council, according to a statement from the U.S. attorney's office.

He's had many firsts in his career as well, Ortiz noted in her statement.

"[Weinreb] successfully prosecuted Massachusetts' first case of foreign economic espionage; its first case involving use of a laser to interfere with the operation of an aircraft; and its first case involving the threatened use of a biological weapon [ricin]," her office said.

Braintree police chief retires amid evidence room scandal

Braintree Police Chief Russell Jenkins has announced his retirement Thursday while his department is under fire for an audit showing that massive amounts of cash, drugs and guns seized as evidence are missing.

The audit, which was released publicly earlier this month, found that more than $400,000 of seized money along with thousands of pieces of drug evidence and dozens of firearms had vanished, according to the Boston Globe.

"I find the auditor's report of unaccounted for items and poor record keeping practices by the Police Department to be deeply troubling and unacceptable," Mayor Joseph Sullivan told reporters Thursday.

A total of 22 cases have been thrown out of court because of missing evidence, the Patriot Ledger reported.

Jenkins wrote a letter

BRAINTREE POLICE DEPARTMENT/FACEBOOK

to the mayor in which he announced that he will be retiring Oct. 7 after 33 years with the department (the last four as chief). In the letter, he wrote that it was "an honor and a privilege" to serve as chief.

Sullivan accepted his retirement, according to a statement from the mayor's office.

"I appreciate and commend his nearly 34 years of service to the Braintree Police Department and the community," Sullivan wrote. "I wish him and his family well."

Jenkins ordered the audit, which examined evidence dating back to 1999, after suspecting problems with the evidence room. The officer who ran the evidence room killed herself a week after the auditor first spoke with her in May, according to the Globe. KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

Police search for suspicious ice cream truck in Andover that approached teen

Local police are on the lookout for a suspicious ice cream truck whose driver allegedly approached a 16-year-old girl walking by herself in Andover Wednesday.

Authorities said the teen was walking along High Plain Road near Beacon Street when she said the driver slowed down and began to call to her from the road.

The girl told police he yelled "hey" and "hello" from the vehicle, and that she ignored him. The man eventually drove away.

Police said they were unable to find the vehicle after a search that included adjacent towns and local schools. There was no distinctive marking on the truck other than the word "ice cream" written in blue lettering on its side.

"This young woman did the right thing by calling police after an unnerving situation," Police Chief Patrick Keefe said. "At this time we do not feel the public is in any danger, but will continue to search for this vehicle and follow up on any leads we receive."

Anyone with information is asked to call Andover police at 978-475-0411. CHRIS CAESAR

Yahoo says at least 500 million accounts hacked in 2014

Yahoo Inc. said Thursday information associated with at least 500 million user accounts was stolen from its network in 2014 by what it believed was a "state-sponsored actor."

The stolen data may have included names, email addresses, telephone numbers, dates of birth and hashed passwords but may not have included unprotected passwords, payment-card data or bank-account information, the company said.

"The investigation has found no evidence that the state-sponsored actor is currently in Yahoo's network," the company said.

Yahoo said it was working with law enforcement on the matter.

Yahoo GETTY IMAGES

It was not clear how this disclosure might affect Yahoo's plan to sell its email service and other core internet properties to Verizon Communications Inc.

Verizon said in July it would buy Yahoo's core internet properties for $4.83 billion.

Verizon said Thursday it was notified of the breach in the last two days.

"We will evaluate as the investigation continues through the lens of overall Verizon interests. ... Until then, we are not in position to further comment," the company said.

Technology website Recode first reported Tuesday that Yahoo planned to disclose details about a data breach affecting hundreds of millions of users. REUTERS

Friends Meeting at Cambridge Invites You to the Adventure of Quaker Worship

10:30am & 5pm Sunday • 8:30-10am Wednesday

Line Drawing: Lucy Sikes

- ❖ We are a community that seeks to pray seriously and tries to avoid dogma and ritual. We have no creed.
- ❖ Sometimes our deepest meetings for worship take place completely in silence. Most often three to six messages are offered in the course of roughly one hour of worship together.
- ❖ Our worship is not programmed and is not led by a minister. We aspire to be led only by the promptings of the Spirit in our hearts and minds.

Quakerism has deep roots in Christianity.

Today, active Friends Meeting participants include people from many religious traditions: Christianity, Universalism, Non-theism, Buddhism, Judaism, etc. Many LGBTQ folks participate in our community.

All are welcome in a sincere search for spiritual depth

THE ONES THAT GOT AWAY

This is why people doubt their government.

A report from federal investigators found more than 800 people who were supposed to be deported were instead granted U.S. citizenship, because they just chose new names and birthdates for themselves. No massive support from foreign operatives. No huge computer hack. They simply sidestepped the security process as neatly as ballroom dancers.

Mind you, these folks were from countries of concern to security experts and/or had tried to cheat the system before, so the feds had fingerprints which could have prevented this goof up. But those records were old, had not been digitized and were not readily available to immigration officials. So, bake a loaf of banana bread and get some flowers — let's welcome the new neighbors!

I don't want to demonize these people. Homeland Security points out many of them probably

TOM FOREMAN

CNN's Tom Foreman is the author of the book "My Year of Running Dangerously." @tomforemancnn represent no significant security threat. But how do officials know? This report came from Homeland's own inspector general and says in bold print "Few of these naturalized U.S. citizens have been investigated."

How you view all of this probably depends on how you see politics in general. If you find government a positive force, peopled by dedicated civil servants, you'll likely be satisfied this was an honest mistake. But if you think government is full of overbearing, barely competent bureaucrats ... like I said, this is another log to hurl onto your bonfire of doubt.

Mistakes like this give those who already have doubts every reason to go on doubting the government's ability to grapple with problems and its honesty about failures. They doubt promises that Syrian refugees will be properly screened to keep out terrorists. They doubt the effectiveness of health care reform. They doubt educational initiatives. They doubt trade deals.

In my experience, these are not bad Americans. They don't want to feel this way. But they see in such mistakes evidence of a runaway bureaucracy, unwilling to hold anyone accountable and unable to properly serve its citizens. Of that, they have no doubt.

Can getting an MBA help you?

Impact investing is just one of the new things you can learn in the ever-changing study of business.

What impact can you expect from an MBA?

MBA programs don't stay still — they evolve. Whenever business schools sense an area of interest among prospective students that is backed up by industry opportunities and demand, they will invariably seek to encompass a subject area in their curricula.

Modifications to course offerings and initiatives are made each year by leading schools and a great way to find out if an individual institution is taking their MBA program in new directions that match your ambitions is to talk to school representatives in person, at an event such as the QS World MBA Tour, which comes to Boston on Sept. 29.

Impact investing: An emerging MBA trend

Impact investing — the idea of adding a third dimension to the traditional investment considerations of risk and financial return — is just one area which has been receiving increasing attention in the MBA course lists and provisions of top business schools.

The concept behind impact investing, as a recent Forbes article notes, is hardly new. However, the past few years has seen it gain in currency among venture capitalists and investment banks and this, in turn, is reflected in the number of related course offerings and extracurricular opportunities now available at business school. In terms of prospects, a 2016 survey from the Global Impact Investing Network (GIIN) found that 158 leading practitioners were now managing $77 billion of impact assets, causing its CEO, Amit Bouri, to herald the scene as “a thriving market being built across geographies, sectors and asset classes.”

Measuring the impact of investing in an MBA

For MBAs, the attraction of finding an area of employment within finance that is perhaps less tainted by the criticism received by the wider industry for much of the past decade seems clear.

Before getting to that point, however, prospective MBAs must first consider the appeal of another investment — the qualification itself — and the potential for impact it can offer on their future career.

Money will never be the only way in which a person can measure their ‘MBA impact’ but the qualification’s cost often pushes it to the forefront of applicants’ minds. This is why the company behind the QS World MBA Tour undertakes ROI (return on investment) research which aims to measure the financial gains you can expect to receive if you pursue an MBA. Last year, this research found that full-time MBA graduates across 85 business schools in the US and Canada achieved an average salary uplift of 75 percent, pre- to post-MBA.

That’s the immediate impact but, for the medium and long-term financial benefits, the report also estimated how much more an MBA graduate could expect to earn, as opposed to someone without the qualification.

A decade after graduation, MBAs from schools across the US and Canada were estimated to be approximately $500,000 better off, financially. After a further 10 years, they were ahead by a whopping $2.57 million.

The question before you now is whether you consider this an impact worthy of your investment.

If you’re looking to learn more about the MBA programs offered by leading business schools around the world and want to speak directly with their admissions directors, why not come to a QS World MBA Tour event in one of 23 cities across the US and Canada? By attending, you’ll also become eligible for QS’s exclusive MBA scholarships!

To reserve your free place at the event, register online today here: TopMBA.com/metroUS

On Transparent, Amy Landecker, (left), plays Sarah, the oldest and arguably most melodramatic of the three Pfefferman kids. AMAZON

Amy Landecker isn't holding back

The star of "Transparent" hits her stride.

KATE MOONEY
@yatinbrooklyn
kate.mooney@metro.us

Amy Landecker is just getting started.

The 46-year-old actor worked in theater in Chicago for years. Supporting roles in "A Serious Man" and "Dan in Real Life" gave her on-screen cred, but it wasn't until she landed a starring role in Amazon Studios' "Transparent" that she came into her own.

The "traumedy," which has won eight Emmys since first airing in 2014—including three at last Sunday's ceremony—tells the story of an L.A. family adapting after its patriarch (Jeffrey Tambor) comes out as transgender.

Landecker plays Sarah Pfefferman, the oldest of the three adult children, who include Ali (Gaby Hoffmann) and Josh (Jay Duplass), whom many perceive as the most self-indulgent of the gang, which is saying a lot.

"People say, 'Oh, she's a hot mess.' I'm like, they're all hot messes!" says Landecker. "I have a lot of sympathy for Sarah. She's the oldest daughter of two parents who are incredibly narcissistic. She hasn't exactly been given a great set of tools."

We spoke with Landecker about how much she relates to her character, her crush on co-star Kathryn Hahn and the merits of finding career success in her 40s.

Season three of "Transparent" premieres Friday on Amazon Prime.

Last season showed your character picking up the pieces after her divorce and nonstarter second marriage. What can we expect for Sarah in season three?

Last season felt like I was doing a lot of dating and smoking [weed] and acting out and being alone. It felt very divorce-y to me, like how my [real-life] divorce felt. There's this year after that is just sort of flailing around and feeling sorry for myself.

This season felt very light for me, more buoyant, because she's going through a spiritual exploration.

Wherever Sarah goes, there's some wreckage. It's sad, and I love her, and it breaks my heart, but there's just something about her that for whatever reason can be toxic to other human beings. And the one person who gets her and is there for her no matter what, oddly, is Len [her ex-husband], so [this season] there's a coming home, not in a romantic way, to the partnership and the family she has with him.

Where do you think her self-loathing comes from?

I know in my own self-loathing, it's that in the pursuit to make myself happy, I hurt other people. Part of self-realization is there's usually some collateral damage, and I think whenever you break up a family, whether it's for good or bad, you have a tremendous sense of failure and guilt. I think she's also felt very isolated and alone—one of the storylines this year is about Ali and Josh, how close they are.

My mom's the oldest of three, and when you're the oldest child you get a lot of the responsibility. You also get the brunt of whatever the parental dysfunction is—it's right on you.

And you try to protect your younger siblings from it. They don't know it, but you're the wall between that, so they can stay playful and happy together and you're sort of out there on your own.

Does the cast of "Transparent" feel like a family at this point?

It's like a family without the dysfunction. I had one little fight with Gaby [Hoffmann], Bernie vs. Hillary this year. It was interesting, I was Hillary because I'm the older woman and she was Bernie because she's younger; it was a generational difference. And I was making this point that as a woman who's been protesting and fighting for women's rights since I was a kid, it was so monumental to me that we could have a female president. And for her, that was beside the point, and kind of accepted, "Well, let's not settle." We got into it and then we immediately called each other and apologized. There's the potential for friction but honestly, there's also a tremendous amount of love.

We've gleaned from social media that you're pretty close with Kathryn Hahn.

I lobbied for Kathryn to work with me! I basically did this show because of "Afternoon Delight"—I was so blown away by

Kathryn's performance. She also happens to be one of the warmest, funniest human beings on the planet, and I feel like she's just starting now for people to understand the depth of her abilities and how incredible she is. We all on set are like, clapping and in awe.

You found success as an actress later in life. What's that like?

I just feel like we have a bunch of statistics and information, that if we live by it, we'll feel crushed and we'll never leave the house. And I think what's so great about my story to tell is that there's an exception to every rule.

I was struggling working in theater and voice-over, and the fact that my on-camera career found a life and footing at this amazing job in my 40s? You can't have hope if you don't have an example of the possibility, whatever it is you're trying to do.

Not knowing what you want to do until later in life is lovely and should be celebrated more. You don't even know what you're capable of if you don't explore. We're just so afraid, especially women, afraid of failure, afraid of upsetting people. We just have to encourage each other to go for it.

"Storks"

Director: Doug Sweetland, Nicholas Stoller
Voices of: Adam Sandler, Katie Crown

"Storks," a very loud children's movie, concerns corporate corruption and the nebulous nature of the nuclear family. The movie was co-directed by Nicholas Stoller, who helmed "Forgetting Sarah Marshall," a very funny R-rated comedy in which Jason Segal flops his penis around, as well as this year's "Neighbors 2," a movie about nefarious sorority girls and a shirtless Zac Efron. You get the feeling that he may not have a very good grasp of children's entertainment.

In "Storks," the birds have abandoned the baby business and now deliver packages. Andy Sandler, doing an ersatz Jim Carrey, plays Junior, a stork smitten with the idea of becoming boss. When Junior can't bring himself to fire the inept human worker Tulip (Katie Crown) who routinely ruins their profit margin, he ends up on an adventure to deliver a pink-haired human baby to Ty Burrell and Jennifer Aniston.

The idea of "Storks" is sort of fun, in theory, but the animation is generic and the tone confused. For every dumbed-down, diluted adult joke about gentrification or father-son bonding, the movie gives us some gratuitous slapstick, because kids love violence. It also has an irritating habit of setting up a decent visual gag, then explaining that a gag just happened, in case we didn't get it. Hearing Kelsey Grammer, as the stork boss, bellow, "Destroy the baby factory!" is pretty amusing, though.

Like an old man writing a think piece on the perils of millennials, "Storks" feels painfully out of touch. Its vague platitudes on family and capitalism won't make sense to kids and are too blunt for adults. The most annoying of the many annoying characters says "brah" a lot. As in, "Is 'Storks' good? Nah, brah."

"The Magnificent Seven"

Director: Antoine Fuqua
Stars: Denzel Washington, Chris Pratt

● ● ● ● ●

"The Magnificent Seven" is a Western. Maybe that's good enough. It's always great to have a new oater in an age when the genre's as dead as a drunk who started a fight with John Wayne. Watching Antoine Fuqua's redo of the pokey 1960 classic, about gun-slinging rogues hired to save a town, is a truly bittersweet experience — or as bittersweet as a movie can be with a potentially Guinness-level body count. You might be eager to forgive it its superficial volleys for diversity, if only because you so rarely see six-shooters and frontier saloons and, especially, Denzel Washington on a horse.

The gang's all here: Vincent D'Onofrio, Martin Sensmeier, Manuel Garcia-Rulfo, Ethan Hawke, Denzel Washington, Chris Pratt and Lee Byung-hun are your new Magnificent Seven. METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER, COLUMBIA PICTURES

Washington leads the rainbow-colored crew, which now includes only three white guys, plus a Mexican guy, a Chinese guy and a Native American. The nonwhites who aren't Denzel get the least to do, but so it goes. At least there will be blood — or, actually, there won't be, because this is a PG-13 family picture.

Director Antoine Fuqua ("Training Day") has never not made an R-rated movie, and you can tell. The pistol-shootin' climax is like a Bosch painting with all the gnarly bits censored. During an earlier, more modest shoot-out — one that "only" claims 25 dead — our heroes each count their kills to see who "won." No one can count as high as the number mowed down in the epic closer, which seems excessive even before the baddies bust out a Gatling gun. Not that you didn't have a good time. Call it a draw. MATT PRIGGE

"Queen of Katwe"

Director: Mira Nair
Stars: Madina Nalwanga, David Oyelowo

Square as a chessboard, "Queen of Katwe" is a straight-up, no-shame underdog movie. But underneath it runs real feeling, not the least because its hero, one Phiona Mutesi (played by Madina Nalwanga), is no mere up-from-the-bootstraps go-getter. She came all the way from the slums of Uganda and became a World Candidate Master at chess by the time she was barely a teen. Most underdog movies are about winning and elevating one's self up a couple castes; "Katwe," at heart, is about basic survival.

It's still more fable than social-realist tract. Young Phiona's gifts seem to come from up on high, though she still has to work. Her teacher is Robert Katende (a boyishly charming David Oyelowo), a part-time soccer coach who runs a chess program for low- and no-income kids. He's amazed when the shy, soft-spoken Phiona, who can't afford school and can't even read, is a natural chess god. Soon she's being jetted all over the world, but always returning to squalor.

In "Queen of Katwe," Madina Nalwanga plays Phiona Mutesi, a real-life woman who went from the slums of Uganda to the world's chess tournaments. EDWARD ECHWALI

The acting helps make the clichés come alive, particularly Lupita Nyong'o as Phiona's tough but maternal mom, who threatens to steal the movie just by strutting her stuff. But the real star is director Mira Nair ("Monsoon Wedding"). She's a filmmaker who always conveys a strong sense of community and place. She does the same here. Her film depicts Katwe as a place teeming with life and even beauty, with people defined by more than just their struggles. Nair sticks to the paint-by-numbers script, but she has a way of making the corniest, most stock moments feel lively, or at least sincere. All "Katwe" had to do was tell a simple story. Instead it does more. MP

From Metallica to the Met

The BSO's 136th season kicks off with an all-Russian program; sensational classical pianist Lang Lang sits in.

LINDA LABAN
@MetroBOS
letters@metro.us

Boston, take note: The Russians are coming. But this isn't a New Cold War threat, it's a promise of some of the most passionate classical music ever written. Saturday's Boston Symphony Orchestra Opening Night Gala features a vigorous all-Russian program that includes Mussorgsky's perky "Pictures at an Exhibition," and Shostakovich's aptly named "Festive Overture." An undoubted highlight is guest soloist, pianist Lang Lang, who will romp through Prokofiev's sprightly Piano Concerto No. 3.

"I have played this piece many times," says

Classical pianist Lang Lang will perform as part of the BSO Opening Night Gala on Saturday evening. HAROLD HOFFMAN

Lang Lang. "I love the structure displaying colorful harmonies and percussive acoustics. It is not an easy piece technically, but I learned it when I was a teenager."

Playing such auspicious events doesn't raise any sign of nerves and Lang Lang keeps an even keel by enjoying the moment: "The BSO is one of the best orchestras in the world. I am always happy to work with BSO," he says cheerfully. "I don't really feel nervous. I just enjoy the music."

Under the astute wave of music director and Maestro Andris Nelsons, who marks his third BSO season this year, the opening night program is familiar to Lang Lang, who grew up in China listening to classical music and what he calls "some important symphonies," before moving to the U.S. to further his musical journey. The 34-year-old also performed with heavy metal titans Metallica, and Lang Lang says there are other rock bands he'd like to work with, too many for him to recount.

"There are more and more great bands [that] are coming up," he enthuses without naming names or committing himself. His enthusiasm for music seems genreless: For his new album, "New York Rhapsody," a homage to the city where he is based, he choose to work with a variety of guest artists including soul singer Andra Day, bluegrass vet Jerry Douglas, jazz giant Herbie Hancock and Jeffrey Wright, the brilliant actor known for playing the double agent in two episodes of a recent Bond reboot, and as Bill Murray's sleuthing neighbor in "Broken Flowers."

"I research on every piece I perform, and find the best way to collaborate with other artists," he explains. "I did my best to match the style of each piece with the performer, and they are wonderful artists and handle the music perfectly. Music has no boundary," adds Lang Lang. "Everyone could be a musician, I believe."

Fearless and free

Married duo Bruce Driscoll and Marie Seyrat make up the indie pop band Freedom Fry. She's French, he's American and their upbeat, smile-inducing songs are enough to make anyone feel cross-culturally cool.

How do you decide whether a song should be sung in French or English?

Marie Seyrat: I think French sounds good on specific songs and genres; things with more of a retro '60s or '70s vibe. Some exact phrases are impossible to translate, especially trying to fit them to a specific rhythm. French works best with more complex, poetic lyrics.

The Freedom Fry name came a time when some Americans changed the name of french fries to freedom fries. Do you think that's changed?

Driscoll: I think the vast majority of Americans have never harbored any ill will towards the French — sure, the people who got all fired up and thought they'd really stick it to the French by calling their fries "freedom fries" are still out there and we know who they're voting for.

Do you feel like it's more difficult to keep your personal lives on the DL?
Seyrat: It is and it isn't. We like spending time together, and we share the same passion for music. We're the kind of couple that doesn't really get tired of each other, so our job and daily routine definitely enables this bond and this closeness to bloom. RACHEL RACZYKA

Red Sox with plenty of overachievers in 2016

Hanley Ramirez, Rick Porcello and Mookie Betts have powered the Red Sox this season.

RYAN HANNABLE
@RyanHannable
sports@metro.us

This 2016 Red Sox season is starting to feel a little like 2013.

The key for the Sox in the 2013 season was a number of different players having career years — including Koji Uehara, Junichi Tazawa, Shane Victorino and Mike Napoli. This brings us to this season where a number of players are having career years — Hanley Ramirez, Rick Porcello and Mookie Betts. That isn't even including David Ortiz, who is having the best season of any 40-year-old to ever play the game.

Here is a look at those three players' seasons:

Hanley Ramirez

Ramirez is batting .292

with 28 home runs and 107 RBI. He's really turned it on of late as in the month of September he's hitting .357, while slugging .771 with nine home runs in 18 games. It's no coincidence the team has gone on its recent run with Ramirez being so hot. Also, Ramirez has played a solid first base all season long. Many questioned how things would go with him after the disaster in left field last year, but he's only had a few plays this year that have been worth questioning his defense.

Rick Porcello

No one saw this coming after his first season in Boston when he went 9-15 with a 4.92 ERA, but now in his second year he is a legitimate candidate for the American League Cy Young. The right-hander is 21-4 with a 3.08 ERA and has actually been the Red Sox' best and most consistent starter this season — even better than David Price. Even more impressive is that the Red Sox are 11-3 when Porcello starts after a loss. Remarkably, it now seems that Porcello would be the Game 1 playoff starter.

Mookie Betts

Everyone knew Betts would one day be something special, but maybe not this soon. Betts is serious MVP candidate. The 23-year-old is hitting .318 with 31 home runs and 108 RBI. He's been moved from the lead-off spot to cleanup and stayed with his increase in power — not bad for a player who stands just 5-foot-9 and weighs 180 pounds. His .318 average is third-best in the American League and just happens to be second on the Red Sox as Dustin Pedroia is hitting .322. Betts has also played a solid right field and you would never know that until early 2014 he was a second baseman.

Where to place your money this weekend

The best bets for NFL Week 3.

ROBERT CRISCOLA
@ItsGood2BeKing
sports@metro.us

A look at NFL Week 3, and where you should place your cash this weekend.

Arizona Cardinals (-4) @ Buffalo Bills

The Cardinals came out flat in their Week 1 loss to the Patriots, but they were firing on all cylinders in Week 2 as they crushed the Buccaneers, 40-7. This will be the first time Arizona takes its show on the road, but that shouldn't be a problem for the Cards as they were 6-2 against the spread in their road games last season. Carson Palmer and crew will face a Bills squad that appears to be in total disarray. Buffalo fired its offensive coordinator (Greg Roman) despite putting up 31 points on the Jets last Thursday, and there is speculation that head coach Rex Ryan is on the hot seat after an 0-2 start. The pick: Cardinals -4

Oakland Raiders @ Tennessee Titans (-1.5)

The venue will play a huge part in this contest. Marcus Mariota has been out of sync in the Music City, as he threw nine INTs compared to just nine TDs at home last year. This goes a long way in explaining why the Titans have dropped four of their last five ATS at home. The Raiders are 6-1 ATS in their last seven road games, including a Week 1 cover in New Orleans. Tennessee has been able to shut down the Vikings' and Lions' offense in successive weeks, but they'll get a stern test as the Raiders have put up over 450 yards of offense

Quick picks

Baltimore Ravens @ Jacksonville Jaguars (E)
Washington Redskins @ New York Giants (-4.5)
Denver Broncos @ Cincinnati Bengals (-3)
Cleveland Browns @ Miami Dolphins (-10)
Detroit Lions @ Green Bay Packers (-7.5)
Minnesota Vikings @ Carolina Panthers (-7)
San Francisco 49ers @ Seattle Seahawks (-9.5)
Los Angeles Rams @ Tampa Bay Buccaneers (-5.5)
New York Jets @ Kansas City Chiefs (-3)
Pittsburgh Steelers (-3.5) @ Philadelphia Eagles
Chicago Bears @ Dallas Cowboys (-7)
Atlanta Falcons @ New Orleans Saints (-3)

in each of their first two games. Expect Oakland to come out on top in a potential shootout. The pick: Raiders +1.5

San Diego Chargers @ Indianapolis Colts (-3)

The injury focus seems to be on San Diego, as RB Danny Woodhead was ruled out for the year with an ACL tear just one week after WR Keenan Allen was diagnosed with the same injury. But the Colts may be just as hurt as the Chargers. They had to go to the bottom of their depth chart just to get some feasible cornerbacks to play last week, as Vontae Davis, Darius Butler and Patrick Robinson have all been battling various ailments. Davis is listed as out indefinitely, while the other two are considered "questionable" for Sunday's tilt. Even at full strength the Colts defense is subpar; they let up 39 points hosting Detroit in Week 1. The pick: Chargers +3

Philip Rivers and the Chargers are pleading for you to take them this weekend. GETTY IMAGES

Playing the over vs. under NBA win total game

A look at the Celtics, Knicks and 76ers.

MATT BURKE
@burke_metro
matt.burke@metro.us

Las Vegas' Westgate Superbook released its first over/under win totals for the 2016-17 NBA season this week. Some analysis as it pertains to the Celtics, Knicks and 76ers.

Celtics: 51.5 wins

My initial reaction to this one is that it's too high. The 50 number really scares you off for a team that doesn't have a LeBron, Durant, Westbrook or a Curry. Also consider that just six teams in the entire NBA got above 50 wins last season — the Warriors, Spurs, Thunder, Clippers, Cavaliers and Raptors. Will these Celtics be as talented as any of those teams?

On the flip side, the Celtics won 48 games last year and Brad Stevens jumped from 25 to 40 to 48 wins in his first three years in the league.

Verdict: Under. I think the Celtics come up just shy, with 50 wins.

Knicks: 38.5

The Knicks had 32 wins last season. Are they 6½ wins better this year? I'll go with the crowd and say, yes.

You've got to think that one of following pans out well: Derrick Rose, Joakim Noah, Brandon Jennings. Beyond those "ifs," the combo of Porzingis in his second year and the addition of a strong, new voice in the locker room in Jeff Hornacek will help the Knicks get to at least 40 wins.

Verdict: Over.

Brad Stevens' win totals have jumped each year he's been head coach of the Celtics. GETTY IMAGES

76ers: 27.5

I get that there's finally hope in Philly, but the Sixers won 10 (TEN!!!!) games last year. A jump of 17.5 wins with what will be a completely discombobulated big man rotation in an Eastern Conference that has 13 other teams hellbent on making the playoffs this season? Not buying.

Seriously, looking at the entire Eastern Conference, the Nets might be the only team that would admit they have zero shot at the playoffs right now.

In other words, the Sixers will see tough competition, night-in and night-out. No gimme games.

Verdict: Under. They double their win total from last year and get to 20, but more than that is a bit much.

Aries Don't share your feelings if it won't help you get what you want. Keep the peace, bide your time and offer incentives that will attract the necessary help.

Taurus A brief trip or conference will spark your interest in something you've never done before. Explore new territory. Romance looks promising and will improve your life.

Gemini Get down to basics and consider the dreams that you haven't had time to fulfill. No one can do the work for you. Do what makes you happy.

Cancer Moderation will be required if you want to avoid a difficult financial situation. Someone will be critical if you make changes without alerting the affected parties.

Leo You can bring about positive change that will raise your standard of living or bring greater joy to your personal life and relationships. Travel is favored.

Virgo Make a change that will update your look. Being current will help you gain the respect and support you need to turn your plans into a reality.

Libra Look for changes that will allow you to explore new territory, learn more about the people around you and improve your chance to get ahead. Romance is encouraged.

Scorpio Your biggest gain will come from putting your original and innovative ideas into play. A unique change at home will improve your assets and relationship.

Sagittarius Communicating from your heart will have a far greater effect than being evasive or refusing to admit that a problem exists. Facing facts will help resolve issues.

Capricorn Keep a safe distance from anyone talking big and offering the impossible. Focus inward on self-improvement and looking and feeling your best.

Aquarius Consider your options. Don't feel pressured to get involved in someone else's plans. Take care of personal business before committing to help others.

Pisces Fix up your home and do whatever it takes to please the people you live with. Helping out more or showing greater affection will pay off. EUGENIA LAST
